

Daeyong Byun

Soil has been the most familiar plaything to me. At least it was in my childhood. Nowadays, we are used to playing with colorful graphics and new technologies, and at some point, play is based on virtual worlds. The rustic dirt play of my childhood is hard to find anymore, but as a writer, it has become my profession and daily routine.

I think that the sculptural elements that are refined to be smooth and textured using traditional clay sculpting techniques are innate. When I think back to my childhood, when I wasn't majoring in art, I remember naturally expressing smooth textures and textures in my drawings and playing with clay. My love of cartoons and mythology is reflected in many of my works. I love stories, so there is an organic relationship between my work and the journals.

Many of my works feature characters or animals that are familiar to the public. Their smooth textures and bright colors make them look like well-packaged commercial products. However, behind the scenes, there are social satires or uncomfortable stories of people around us.

People sometimes say that I am a natural storyteller. Telling a story is not empty when someone needs to hear it. I don't think I only talk about myself. I don't think I only talk about myself. I am you" or "Your Comfort and Solace," when I see someone else's painful story projected onto my family, I think that when we find something that we can relate to, we can empathize with it and understand the other person.
