

Haiying Hu

Haiying Hu was born in Qingdao, Shandong Province, China, in 1986. She studied ceramic pottery at the University of Jingdezhen, where she later graduated from the graduate school with a major in ceramic pottery. Since 2006, she has been living and working in Jingdezhen.

Traditional themes infused with a modern sensibility are central to her artistic creation, leading her to simplify her outlines. Although her works often depict landscapes, they typically feature mountains without any visible water. Hu adopts a "point" approach to her creations, reflecting the characteristics of blue and white materials, where the drawing number corresponds to color shades. Countless points contribute to the richness and depth of her work, avoiding monotony. The overall palette consists of Qinghua blue, accented by subtle greens and golden hues reminiscent of sunsets. Her works are presented as long, continuous patchwork banners without frames, allowing for an endless daydream and an ongoing exploration of landscapes within a limited space. They embody not just scenic representations but also the emotional landscapes of both the artist and the viewers. Each person, standing in a different position, will perceive a unique image, even when observing the same landscape. Although the viewpoint may be identical, individuals will experience varying emotions based on their moods. The act of engaging with her artwork invites viewers to appreciate, feel, and judge based on their personal experiences. This process creates a shared dialogue in the same space, reflecting the artist's intention for connection.
